1) Dehumidifier, 16L/Day, Quiet Dehumidifiers for Home — £101.99, 4.8★ This is the strongest value alternative if you want more capacity for less money than the MeacoDry Black. At 16L/day, it's likely better suited to larger or wetter spaces, and the 3L tank plus laundry mode make it practical for regular clothes drying through the UK's damp autumn and winter months. What's better: lower price, higher rating, and stronger stated extraction. What's worse: it doesn't carry the same established brand confidence as Meaco, so long-term build quality and noise performance may be less predictable. Choose this if you want maximum performance per pound and need something for a bedroom, utility room, or medium-sized living area.

2) Meaco MeacoDry ABC Dehumidifier (Silver) 10L — £129.99, 4.6★ This is the closest like-for-like Meaco alternative, just in a smaller 10L format. Compared with the main product, it should be better if you only need to manage condensation in a smaller flat, spare room, or single bedroom, and you want to save a bit of money while staying with the same brand. What's better: lower upfront cost, same trusted Meaco ecosystem, and likely a good fit for typical UK bedroom condensation rather than heavy-duty drying. What's worse: lower capacity, so it may struggle more in larger rooms, laundry-heavy households, or older homes with persistent damp. Choose this if you like Meaco's reputation but don't need the extra capacity of the main model.

3) Hangsun 12L Dehumidifier with Digital Humidity Display — £97.99, 4.5★ This is a budget-friendly middle ground for people who want useful features without paying Meaco prices. The 12L/day rating, sleep mode, laundry drying mode, continuous drainage, and timer make it a flexible option for bedrooms, bathrooms, and basements. What's better: lower price, decent feature set, and continuous drainage for unattended use. What's worse: it's less premium than the MeacoDry Black, and the brand may not offer the same refinement in noise control or long-term reliability. Choose this if you want a capable all-rounder for general UK damp control and occasional laundry drying.

4) Meaco Portable Dehumidifier DD8L — £169.99, 4.5★ This is the premium choice if your priority is portability and desiccant performance rather than standard compressor efficiency. Desiccant dehumidifiers are often a better fit for colder UK spaces such as garages, unheated rooms, and homes where winter temperatures drop low, because they can perform more consistently than compressor models. What's better: excellent for cold conditions, compact footprint, and strong suitability for small homes or awkward spaces. What's worse: it's more expensive than the main product and may not be as energy efficient in warmer, everyday room use. Choose this if you need a specialist machine for cold, damp-prone areas rather than a general household dehumidifier.

5) Dehumidifiers for Home Damp, Compressor Dehumidifier with Laundry Dry — £139.99, 4.4★ This sits close to the MeacoDry Black on price and is aimed at the same type of buyer: someone fighting condensation, damp, and clothes drying indoors. Compared with the main product, it offers a similar compressor format and useful extras like a digital humidity display, continuous drainage, and a 24-hour timer. What's better: slightly cheaper, feature-packed, and likely good for everyday laundry drying. What's worse: the lower rating suggests less buyer confidence than the Meaco, which matters if you want a quieter, more proven option for bedrooms or living spaces. Choose this if you want a near-match on features and don't mind trading brand reputation for a lower price.

Still Buy the Original If...

The original MeacoDry Black is still a strong choice if you want a reliable, quiet compressor dehumidifier from a trusted UK brand and prefer a straightforward option for everyday condensation and mould control. It's especially sensible for bedrooms, living rooms, and general household use where you value proven performance over chasing the lowest price.
